THE Tung-wha Hospital has lately been brought into prominence again in matters that are admittedly beyond its province. We have had occasion at various times to draw attention to the powers assumed and exercised by this most extraordinary institution. When, soon after its inauguration, we pointed out the probability of its being a hospital in name only, and in reality the centre of an organisation among the natives for the purpose of taking steps to manage sundry matters their own way, the prediction was scouted as alarmist. Before very long, however, it was discovered that the Hospital Committee, were engaged in other business than seeing to the welfare of nationts, and it had at longth to be admitted that, if the medical work of the Hospital was not absolutely subsidiary to other interests looked after by the committee, it was by no means its only raison d'être. But official notice was taken of their doings, They not only discussed all public mat- for defendant. ters affecting the Chinese population, but waited in deputation upon the Governor to make representations to him of their on divers subjects. By degrees men waxed greater, until at last the Chinese population have come to regard the powers which belong only to the Government officials. Another phase of this inscrutable and many-sided institution has lately come to light. The Hospital has been turned into a house agency. But they have, it must be confessed, received a good deal of encouragement in their assertions, and this from a source where it ought least to have emanated. At the outset the Government of this Colony. though probably without intending it, invested the Committee with an undue amount of importance. TURIAN EXHIBITION.

The addition of a Japanese department distinguishes the present Exhibition from every empire in the Chinese seas have become competitors with their Angle-Australian neighbours in the friendly and percelul contests of civilisation. And it may be safely affirmed that no other department of the exhibition rivals this special one, either in respect of the richness and rarity of the contributions it contains, or of the strange human interest which en examination of these must evoke in the mind of any well-informed visitor. Elsewhere, the excellent in quality or superior in their specific kind they may be, are still familiar objects. But bere, every separate article is novel, quaint, and ourrous, and each in succession claims and arrests the attention, not less on account of its intrinsic costliness, its beauty, or its claborate workmanship, than from its value as a miniawonderful phases of the dateless national life and storeotyped civilisation of the Eastern Asiatio populations. A phrase that Kinglake has made classic in English literature—"the splendour and bayon of the East"-will frequently recur to the visitor's mind whilst engaged in examining these Japanese productions. In some of them there is displayed an imperial luxury of costliness and a wealth of gorgeous ornamentation that would have befitted the golden house of Nero in the most high and palmy state of Rome. The vases of precious porcelain, the robes of Tyrian dye the inlaid ivory cabinets, the richly-wrough performe caskets made from the rarest woods. and__even__the__priceless__sword-blades__e Damasous are all equalled here. Art and skill, in some of their applications, appear to have attained the point of absolute perfection in the Land of the Rising Sun. But precisely the same point was reached by the artists and artisans of Japan centuries ago; and the superb productions before our eyes or at all events others of exactly similar taste and pattern-might have been imported by Nero himself from the isles of the Far East, to adorn his golden house on the Palatine, if Roman. navigators had then explored the world of the great Pacific. When the visitor to this department ha slaked his curiosity by a perusal of the brie account of Japan and its people prefixed to the detailed oatalogue; and has mentally added the facts that the Japanese empire includes 3,800 islands, large and small, in its dominions, covers 268,500 square miles of territory, and numbers a population of 35 millions of souls he will follow much better the guidance of his eyes than that of the printed pages he holds in his hands. men never could master. The third group that will attract attention will probably be the weapons. Here are the veritable swords and daggers, with small deadlyooking knives insorted in their hilts, which are still worn by the nobles and their retainers, and with which the solemn ceremony of the Hari-Kiru (or Happy Despatch, as we English In the New Japan, it is satisfactory to learn, this plactice of suicide merely on a point of etiquette is fast becoming obsolete, although some instances of it have occurred very recently. A late traveller nurrates the anecdote, for example, that two daimies happened accidentally to jostle each other on the staircase of the Royal Palace at Yeddo. One of the daimies was at the moment carrying a dish to the royal table. The other, convinced that an insult had been intended, then and there gave himself the hard kiru. The attendant on his Sovereign at once hastened to fulfil his last duty, duly laid the dish on the Royal table, and then, returning just in time to catch the dying glance of his friend; gave himself the hari-kiru likewise. But these customs, and others of a similarly barbarous kind, arc, as was said, fast dving out. Japan

Weapons are of as choice a quality as any that a soldier ever wore upon his thigh. Their hilts and sheaths are sumptuously inlaid with gold, lacquered with the creats of the Daimio wearers, and bound with silver slings of silk and allver. Some have hilts of shark's skin. inlaid with gold. The blades are of the finest steel, "the ice-brook's temper," sharp-edged as razors, and pointed like a needle. Deadlier weapons, or costlier of their kind, no warrior ever girded limself withal. There is a whole history of fendalism in the very look of them. Then, the daggers are just as fitting emblems of an equally barbarous era. Fashioned with extreme care to be as handy and as murderous as short weapons can be made, one takes them up and lave them down again with the same feeling of repugnance that one has in handling a bowieknife. The sword is always a warlike weapon. but the short dagger speaks to the feelings more of the assassin than the warrior. The textile fabrics will next draw the visitor's eye. Here are displayed webs of silk as shining in texture, and as richly and quaintly brocaded as any that ever came from the looms of India or of China. The assurance that these fabrics. so aplendid and so costly, are exactly of the same class of goods as those displayed daily in the silk shops of Yeddo, gives one a striking idea of the opulance of the upper class in Japan. But, in point of fact, the strict gradations of rank in society, the pride of aristocratic birth. "the boast of, heraldry and pomp of power," were all established usages in that countries long before Julius Casar landed on the coast of

From silk manufactures, and from the hun bler cotton and paper fabrics which serve as towels and pocket-handkerchiefe for the poorer people, the visitor may turn to the webs of velvet and brocade, richly embroidered, some of them gold and silver, and others thick-piled like the most superb fabrics for which Genoa and Utrecht were of old famous. Look at that pile of quilted eilk dressing-gowns-a present for a prince, and yet but specimens of ordinary wear. What noble hangings for the new Governmenthouse would this embroidered gold tissue make, with its faucy flower-patterns modelled for theatrical costumes! In weaving as in the ceramic art, it is certain to t the inhabitants of of the steam power-loom. For, as yet, the only pliese of the shuttle in the island-empire are nimble human fingers.

The thousand-and-one miscellaneous knickknacks in the shape of toys, cigar-cases, cunningly-curved figures in ivory, fans, female ornaments, parasols, umbrellas, card-cases, bamboo canes, and the like, defy all detailed specification. But no visitor will pass by the untique bronze figure of the Buddhist priest mounted on a stage or the other Buddhist priest sitting contemplatively under the canopy. or those bronze castings of the peacock and domestic fowl, without acknowledging that they are each in their way perfect gems of art manufacture.

This hasty and wholly inadequate first survey of these Japanese marvels must come to a summary stop. But the first impressions left upon the mind will remain, and the visit will/be repeated again and again until the mind familigrises itself with the entire little world of wonders and all that it bespeaks. Not merely as an assemblage of odd, glittering, splendid, and sometimes groresque articles, will they be inspected; but as tangible evidences of the existence, in those islands of the sea lying to the northward of our own continent. of an empire populous, opulent, cultured, and skilled in many curious and useful arts; presenting as extraordinary an illustration as either China or India ever did of a splendid though stationary civilisation, and owning a population as industrious, as frugal, and as diligent in business as any to be found elsewhere on the face of the earth. The new Japan has made its first contribution to the industrial competition of the Australias-let the indication be fruitful of good promise! DIAMOND DUST AS POISON.

Chemical Analyser, has just issued his Report

Mr. Wellington Gray, the Government for the year 1874-5-a period in which the unusual number of 295 medico-legal cases were examined in his department. The Baroda case occupies some pages in this interesting Raport. The following disquisition upon the harmlessness of diamond dust will be re-assuring to all who have wealthy enemies in this country :-" The fact that powdered diamond was a component of the poisonous dose, and its subsequent discovery in the sediment, renders this a case unique in the annals of modern poisoning. There is none other on record and wider gulf between her dogma and the that I can discover in which diamond dust has been actully detected in a poisonous mixture, of which it was made an ingredient most cureful phemical examination of the recoil from what seem to them the profane absuron account of its supposed noxious nature. IMPURTANT DISCOVERY OF COAL. A most important discovery of coal has just been made at the trial borings on the estate of the Cannock and Huntingdon Colliery Compury, and which is sure to prove of great advantage to South Staffordsbire. After boring for two years, and overcoming very great diffito whom the Cannock and Huntingdon Colliery Company entrusted the work of testing their at a depth of 435 feet. The company's estate, which lies to the east of the fault running north and south under the Huntingdon belt, been considered barren ground, but the present discovery will go a long way towards solving the question whether coal may not be found on a vast tract of the intried land towards the north-east of Wolverhampton. The Cannock coal-field by the new find, is thus carried another step towards Shropshire, over a fault, and on ground which has never been worked before. The discovery fully justifies the opinion expressed by the mining engineers, who reported upon the estate, that there was coal beneath it, und the information will, no doubt, be a surprise to many shareholders, us it was not expected that coal would be found until a lower depth had been reached. We believe that plans and specifications for sinkings have been prepared, and no doubt operations will be commenced, now that coal has been found, without further loss of time. The ground acquired by the company comprises 1,000 acres of the estate of Lord Hatherton, and is situated about a mile and a half to the east of the London and North Western Company's line from Wolverhamton to Stafford, and to which it is proposed in the Company's prospectus to make a branch line.

- -As when a brother tells a brother a fall-His praises, not from lips reluctant wrung. Were aweet as music to the cars of all. And thus it is, and thus it is to be,
- Till every noble heart has closed its trust; Till not a pioneer beside the sea Shall linger, save in his remembered dust; We hear the trend of their receding feet. 'As one by one the phalanx disappears That mustered at the drum of fortune's beat,
- And faced the west, as freedom's pioncers. We see them falling from their forward lines Along the travel-worn and dusty way, While foud hearts pause beside their lonely shrines, Where sleep the heroes of a-trying day,
- We see their white tents folded on the plains-Their comp-fires, burnt 18 cahes, smoke no more And where they trad the sound of funeral strains Ring down the valleys and along the shore.
- Theirs was heaven's ample charler to subdue The desert places and the beasts that roam, And in the rocky wilderness to hew
- A rost, a habitation, and a home, The broad foundations of the temple stand They planted on the heights above the sea, And as their thinned ranks silently disband. They rest, oh California I rest with thee.
- The gallant ships of many far-off lauds Once guily sailing for the golden shore, Vhose decks were merry with their voyaging bands,
- They, too, are wasting, with the men they bore; The forest of musts within a sheltering cove-The tented town upon a sandy plain -The picuis cot within the caken grove, " Are gone, and palace and bonneza reign.

The proprietorship of Punch was divided Nearly all articles have of late years iminto four equal shares, between Landells the engraver, Last the printer, and Henry May. hew and Lemon co-editors. One of the least personally known, but still one of the ablest of the present staff, Mr. Percival Leigh, bad published a "Comic Latin Grammar," under the nom de plume of " Paul Prendergast." Somebody present at one of the preliminary meetings suggested that the "Grammar was really comic, and the author was promptly hunted up. He was discovered in chambers at Chapel-place, Oxford-street. Mr. Hodder was Punch's ambassador to Mr. Leigh, who responded to the invitation with prudent inquiries as to the character of the paper and the responsibilities of its proprietary. He would wait and see what the new paper was like. Mr. John Leech had illustrated "The Comic Latin Grammar." To this artist Mr. Leigh went for advice, and the result was that Punch secured two recruits instead of one; and in his fourth number appeared their joint work, "Foreign Affairs," a cartoon by Leech, with descriptive text by Leigh. The cartoon was engraved by these have been torn down from the jungle, of old workmanship. It would take up too Landells. It is now too well known for comment here. It was the beginning of those caricatures of "Mossoo," which were the delight of Punch's patrons in its palmiest; days. It is a series of "types" not now altogether extinct, but, like Loicester square itself, greatly modified and improved. At first Mr. Leech only drew occasionally, and some of his sketches were not used. Eventually, the reader knows, he became the l principal caricaturist of the publicaton, and
